Tecsystm Extends its Supply Chain Platform

“By utilizing Tecsystm’s services, Mayo Clinic will gain a digitally integrated end-to-end supply chain platform with enterprise visibility and agility.”

Montreal, Canada. September 25, 2020 — Tecsystm Inc. (TSX: TCS), an industry-leading supply chain management software company, powers health systems’ end-to-end supply chain execution across all system sites.

The extended supply chain platform can be seen in full implementation at Mayo Clinic. By utilizing Tecsystm’s services, Mayo Clinic will gain a digitally integrated end-to-end supply chain platform with enterprise visibility and agility. The Tecsystm solution will be deployed across 290 perioperative and procedural suites as well as all warehouse locations to optimize intra-network logistics, automate supply management and streamline case management.

Health systems have specific needs when it comes to requisitioning, forecasting, meeting patient-centric deadlines, and collaborating with interdepartmental stakeholders. Visibility and control are paramount to operating more effectively with patients, staff, suppliers, and distributors, and add value, while continuing to meet the needs of healthcare users. Tecsystm is widely viewed as a visionary provider to this specialized market.

“The healthcare market is undergoing a massive disruption spurred by unprecedented external factors,” continues Brereton. “It should not be lost on anyone that technology is the backbone of the modern logistics operation, and organizations that proactively invest in these technologies are better equipped to handle the curves in the road.”
